GEM-STONES (Globalisation, Europe and Multilateralism - Sophistication of the Transnational Order, Networks and European Strategies) is a European Joint Doctorate programme involving 8 degree-awarding partner universities, 6 non-academic internship destinations and a publishing house.

Its common research agenda is rooted in the shared observation that the proliferation of international institutions increases the complexity of the global system. Managing these complex regimes efficiently and fairly constitutes both a necessity and a challenge for the European Union.

In response to this shared observation, and with the support the European Commission's Marie Skłodowska-Curie Action, GEM-STONES will hire 15 Early Stage Researchers (ESR = PhD fellows) who, with the help of their co-supervisors and non-academic mentors, will collectively investigate the EU's:

- Institutional capacity to externalise its policies
- Networked capacity to ensure greater policy coherence
- Relative capacity compared to other regional organisations
- Framing capacity to define appropriate behaviors
